BIBLIOGRAPHY of LOCAL HISTORY For Baltimore County Studies

This list of articles, maps, and books, etc., was originally prepared for an architectural history of this county, and we have left in place a few general titles that describe building styles used in this region. The list has been expanded to fit the purposes of neighborhood research. Included are books about some sports figures and other celebrities who live or lived in the county. In some cases, parenthetical statements have been inserted to explain the title and coverage of the document cited. Items not widely available are marked with the library where they can be consulted. Difficult to access materials, manuscripts, and theses are usually not included. We have indexed all of History Trails of Baltimore County and all of the historical feature stories from the Jeffersonian that started in 1930. Those articles were actually by William Washington Williams of Lutherville. By early 1936, the weekly features seem to be all about interesting people and wedding anniversaries, rather than reports on the history of old houses. No house stories at all appeared in 1936, only one in 1937 and 1938, none in 1939. The list excerpted is 61 pages long. All anonymous articles by all authors are listed in chronological order.

NOTE: There are other specialized bibliographies that cover:

- Civil War in Baltimore County
- Agricultural History
- Hampden-Woodberry
- History of Industry in Baltimore City, County, and adjoining subdivisions
- History of North Point
- Brief Items of African American History [excerpts]

Also in Maryland:

- Susquehanna River and bridges
- History of Industry in Western Maryland.
- Industry on Eastern Shore and Southern Maryland

- This list indexes all the contents of History Trails of Baltimore County except for short reprints of old newspaper items.
- The series of history articles published in the Jeffersonian starting in early 1930 were by William Washington Williams of Lutherville. The articles were reprinted in weekly installments starting in 1946. Those articles sometimes are the result of title searching of local properties, but much legendary matter is included, mythical visits by Washington, Lafayette, Betsy Patterson, etc. Mr. Williams overstated the antiquity of many houses that were merely 19th century constructions. Some of the feature stories involved humanitarian institutions, fire companies, people in sports, foreign visitors, returned travelers, artists, and hobbyists, etc.
